Cool & Calculated – Maths Day 2014
On Friday 16th May, four of our Year 8 students got up early to tackle the cooler climbs of Armidale and represent the school at the annual Maths Day held at the University of New England. Faith Dorrian, Jade Dorrian, Ryan Grace and Steven Voutier, with the help of faithful mums, abandoned a maths free day on their timetables to spend an entire day doing maths!

Our team competed against teams from more than 40 other schools, from Grafton to Port Macquarie on the eastern frontier, and Moree down to Dubbo on the west. Two teams from Macksville and one from Nambucca Heads joined us for the bus trip up the hill. While social pleasantries were encouraged, our team was under strict orders not to fraternise too closely with the competition, at least until after the battle had been fought.

The atmosphere was intense in the great hall with 250 other students and more maths teachers than you could poke a metre ruler at. Students were given a wide variety of problems throughout the day, all of which tested and developed teamwork and communication skills. The “jigsaw” problems were enjoyed by most, where each student had a separate part of a bigger problem, the whole of which could not be solved without each individual’s invaluable contribution. A final tangram challenge rounded out the day when brain power was starting to wane.

At the end of the day, our team finished an impressive 4th place in the Central Schools division. This is an excellent achievement amongst some pretty fierce competition! The day was enjoyed by all, but the final battle was waged on the trip home as Bowraville and Nambucca Heads joined forces against Macksville in a window rattling Karaoke sound off. A memorable trip down the mountain...

Our school environment
It was with significant sadness that an old friend departed Bowraville Central School this week. Following an extensive arborist’s report that assessed the safety of our trees across the whole campus, the one specimen that had to be totally removed was the much-loved old Liquid Amber at the centre of the school.

As unfortunate as this is safety comes first. The resulting open space has triggered many ideas already about how best to utilise this same space. Please stay tuned for an opportunity to put your ideas forward.

My thanks to all students, staff and community members for their patience in enabling the workmen on site to be able to go about their noisy but necessary work safely.

P&C
I look forward to discussing all things relating to our ever-improving school at this week’s P&C meeting. Please try to make it on Thursday morning; it is a great way for parents and community members to have a clear voice in both the short term and long term planning of our school.

Have a great week.

The ‘sparrow’ pulled vigilantly into the rotting old part of Havana. The burley crew of ‘Sparrow’ swiftly jumped onto the creaking boards of the evil, smelly dock. They walked up the docks into the bustling streets in search of the tavern to rest in for the night. They stopped at a tavern called The Shinning Moon. When they stepped inside they found a very busy tap room filled with drunken goons and great gamblers.

“Find a seat boys”, Edward said to the crew of the ‘Sparrow’ as he weaved wearily around the drinkers towards the publican.

“What would you like today friend?”, the innkeeper said with a grin.

Edward sat twenty gold pieces on the bench and the innkeepers eyes lit up.

“Three rooms with four beds each”. Edward replied.

The innkeeper took the gold and gave Edward three keys. Edward led his crew up to the rooms and they slept all night.

Early in the morning the well-rested crew of the ‘Sparrow’ set sail to the Bahamas. Six hours into their journey they came across darkened waters.

“What’s this?” Edward questioned.

Suddenly eight colossal purple tentacles burst out of the shady waters. One of the tentacles went to grab the ‘Sparrow’. Edward veered his ship away from the tentacle.

“Load the cannons”, he ordered.

“Cannons ready”

“Fire”.

The port-side cannons went crashing through the monster’s waving tentacles severing them with a large spray of blood. The water was stained with blood as what’s left of the monsters tentacles descended back into the depths of the ocean.

“Full sail”, Edward said

Do you know what games your children are playing and what impact all the violence can have on them?

The school management team and classroom teachers have recently noticed a large number of students role playing characters from video/computer games. While gaming is a fun leisure activity, school playgrounds often see this role playing ending in poor behavioural choices and unhappy students. In response to some unsatisfactory behaviours in our infants classes/playground Mr Northfield scanned the Internet for some useful facts and advice. The following information comes from Oprah’s favourite physician Dr Phil.

According the American Psychological Association, violent video games can increase children's aggression. Dr. Phil explains, "The number one negative effect is they tend to inappropriately resolve anxiety by externalising it. So when kids have anxiety, which they do, instead of soothing themselves, calming themselves, talking about it, expressing it to someone, or even expressing it emotionally by crying, they tend to externalise it. They can attack something, they can kick a wall, they can be mean to a dog or a pet." Additionally, there's an increased frequency of violent responses from children who play these kinds of video games. Furthermore, the American Psychological Association says playing violent games correlates to children being less caring and helpful toward their peers. And these effects happen just as much for non-aggressive children as they do for children who already have aggressive tendencies. Children spend a great deal of time with violent video games at exactly the ages that they should be learning healthy ways to relate to other people and to resolve conflicts peacefully.

- More Tips for Parents: Children Now, an independent research and action organisation, recommends these tips:
  - Know your child: Different children handle things differently. If your child becomes aggressive or unsettled after playing violent video games, don't buy such games, regardless of the child's age. Likewise, if your child likes playing games with characters that look like her or him, purchase games with characters that fit the bill.
  - Read the ratings: Every video and computer game should be rated for age appropriateness on the front of the packaging. Some games also have labels with content descriptions on the back of the packaging. Be sure to read both of these labels in order to determine whether the game is age appropriate for your child and whether it contains material that you do not wish your child to be exposed to.
  - Read more than the ratings: While the ratings can be helpful, they do not tell the whole story. Some features that you may consider violent or sexual may not be labelled as such. In addition, The rating assigned to games do not include guides for the positive inclusion of females or characters of colour. The language on the packaging may give you a better idea of the amount and significance of violence and sexuality, and the presence of gender and racial diversity or stereotypes in the game.
  - Go online: you can visit game maker and distributor Web sites to learn more about the contents of a game. Some have reviews that will provide even more information about the game.
  - Talk to other parents: Find out which games other parents like and dislike as well as which games they let your child play when she or he visits their house. This is a good way to learn about the games that your child enjoys, games that other parents approve of, and to let other parents know which games you do not want your child playing.
  - Play the games with your child: Know what your child is being exposed to and how they react to different features in the games.
  - Talk about what you see: If your child discovers material that he or she finds disturbing or that you find inappropriate, talk about it. This is a great opportunity to let your child know what your values are as well as to help him or her deal with images that may be troubling.
  - Set limits: If you are worried that your child spends too much time playing video games, limit the amount of time or specify the times of day that video games can be played.
  - Put the games in a public space: Just as with the Internet, keep your game consoles and computers in public family space so that you can be aware of the material your child is viewing.
Stories From K/1

Little Red Riding Hood went to her Grandma with goodies. She talked to the big bad wolf and she said “what is your name?” The wolf said to Little Red Riding Hood “do you want to race me Little Red Riding Hood?” Little red Riding Hood Said “yes.” So she ran after the big bad wolf. And so the big bad wolf got dressed. The wolf tricked Grandma and locked her in the cupboard then dressed in her pyjamas. He tricked Little Red Riding Hood. Then the woodcutter shot the big bad wolf. That was the end of the big bad wolf.
